Government Bill

As reported from the Justice and Electoral Committee

Commentary

Recommendation

The Justice and Electoral Committee has examined the Family Court Proceedings Reform Bill and recommends by majority that it be passed with the amendments shown.

Introduction

The Family Court Proceedings Reform Bill seeks to implement the Government's decisions resulting from a review of the Family Court conducted by the Ministry of Justice in 2011. The review involved a public consultation paper, "Reviewing the Family Court", an online questionnaire for court users, and an independent external reference group.

The reforms proposed are intended to address the following issues raised during the review of the family justice system, and confirmed by the external reference group:

- insufficient focus on children and vulnerable people

- lack of support for the resolution of parenting disputes out of court
- complex and uncertain court processes
- significant reliance on court professionals
- fiscal constraints.

The principal reforms proposed would affect the way the system deals with post-separation parenting arrangements for children, shifting the focus from court resolution of disputes to encouraging parents to resolve matters themselves where possible.

The bill is an omnibus bill, which seeks to amend nine Acts. The principal proposed amendments are to the Care of Children Act 2004, the Domestic Violence Act 1995, the Family Courts Act 1980, and the Legal Services Act 2011. The bill would also amend the Children, Young Persons, and Their Families Act 1989, the Child Support Act 1991, the Family Proceedings Act 1980, the Property (Relationships) Act 1976, and the Protection of Personal and Property Rights Act 1988.

This commentary covers the main amendments we recommend to the bill; it does not cover minor or technical amendments.

Commencement of the Act

We recommend amending clause 2 of the bill as introduced, so that most of its provisions, instead of coming into force on 1 October 2013, would come into effect on a date appointed by the Governor-General by Order in Council or 1 October 2014, whichever was earlier. This would provide more time to put new processes and systems in place to implement the changes made by the bill, and in particular to ensure there is a workforce of appropriately skilled family dispute resolution providers.

To the same end, we also recommend that some provisions come into force on the day after the bill receives the Royal assent. These provisions relate to the approval of counselling organisations and service providers, the appointment of counsellors, and the family dispute resolution provisions (except those concerning the use of forms).

Structure of the bill

Part 3 of the bill as introduced seeks to amend the Family Courts Act 1980 and to insert family dispute resolution provisions into the front of that Act and change its title to the “Family Dispute (Resolution Methods) Act 1980”. Concern has been expressed about the proposed title and in particular the omission of any reference to the Family Court.

We recommend that the bill be amended to restrict Part 3 of the bill to the provisions relating to family dispute resolution only, moving the small number of unrelated amendments to the Family Courts Act 1980 to new subpart 2A in Part 5 of the bill. The title of the Family Courts Act 1980 would then remain unchanged.

Family dispute resolution

The bill proposes to introduce a new out-of-court family dispute resolution (FDR) service. We recommend amending clause 9 to insert new section 46CB into the Care of Children Act 2004. It would be mandatory for a person who sought to apply to the court under that Act for a parenting order or to resolve a guardianship dispute to first attend FDR, unless an exemption listed in new section 46CB(3) of that Act applied, for example because of domestic violence.

Family Dispute Resolution would be free for those under the income threshold for civil legal aid (estimated at about 60 per cent of participants). People above the threshold would be required to arrange FDR privately and pay for it themselves. We heard concerns about the cost involved, but most of us are aware of the view that FDR is likely to be less expensive than hiring a lawyer and proceeding to a defended hearing in court.

FDR providers

We considered the absence of criteria for granting, suspending, or cancelling the approval of an FDR provider. We consider it desirable to include more detail about FDR in the bill.

We recommend amending the FDR provisions in the bill as introduced to allow the Secretary for Justice or an approved dispute resolution organisation to appoint a person as an FDR provider. In making the appointment the Secretary for Justice or approved dispute resolution organisation would have to apply the high-level criteria listed, and any more detailed criteria prescribed by regulations under new clause 60E(c).

New clause 60E(d) would provide for the making of regulations prescribing the matters that would disqualify a person from being appointed as an FDR provider. New clause 60A sets out the duties of an FDR provider.

As introduced the bill proposes that providers, after FDR, give to each party a form setting out the matters on which resolution was and was not reached. We recommend inserting new clause 60(B)(6)(b) to require these forms to also include the FDR provider's opinion as to whether a settlement conference would be likely to help settle matters, and whether either of the parties would need legal representation at such a conference. Most of us believe that the FDR provider would be well placed as a result of the time they had spent with the parties to form a view on the capacity and ability of parties to self-represent.

We also recommend amending clause 9 of the bill as introduced to insert new section 46CB(2) of the Care of Children Act, so that an FDR form would be valid for one year.

Referral to FDR

We also recommend amending clause 9 to insert new section 46D into the Care of Children Act to allow a Judge to refer a case to FDR and to refer parties back to FDR. This reinforces the focus on out of court processes to resolve disputes, and would reduce any incentives that might exist for parties to refuse to participate in FDR.

Lawyers acting for parties

Clause 5 of the bill as introduced would insert a new section 7A into the Care of Children Act 2004 to allow a lawyer to act for a party in a proceeding if the application was made without notice, relates to international child abduction, the party is the Crown, a Judge has directed that the case proceed to a defended hearing, or the lawyer is lawyer for a child who is party to the proceedings. The changes proposed in the bill to the role of lawyers for parties have attracted expressions of concern that lawyers would no longer be involved in the initial stages of proceedings under the Care of Children Act.

We consider that lawyers can assist in settlement conferences by mitigating power imbalances, representing parties incapable of representing themselves, and ultimately improving the chances of resolving a dispute. We therefore recommend amending clause 5 of the bill as introduced to insert new paragraphs 7A(5A) and 7A(5B), which would allow a lawyer to act for a party at a settlement conference if a Judge considered that at least one of the parties needed representation, and that legal representation would be likely to facilitate settlement of the issues in dispute. A lawyer could also act for a party to a proceeding if their application met the criteria set out in new paragraph 7A(4).

Concurrent proceedings

The provisions in the bill concerning legal representation for parties relate to Care of Children Act proceedings only. We recommend further amending clause 5 of the bill to insert new subparagraph 7A(4)(b)(ii) into the Care of Children Act to allow a lawyer to act for a party if the Judge has directed that the application under that Act be heard concurrently with an application filed under any other Act. We recognise it would make sense for a lawyer to act on all proceedings that have been directed to be heard concurrently.

Conciliation

We also recommend amending clause 5 by inserting new section 7B into the Care of Children Act 2004, which would place an obligation on lawyers to promote conciliation in cases proceeding under sections 46L, 48, or 56 of that Act by ensuring that the person concerned was aware of the need for the best interests and welfare of children to be the paramount consideration, the mechanisms for assisting resolution of family disputes, the steps for commencing and pursuing the proceedings in court, and the types of directions and orders the court may make.

We consider that the duty of lawyers to consider the best interests and welfare of the child and the requirement to promote conciliation in the interests of the child is an overarching one that should be reflected in the bill. We therefore recommend that clause 81B also be included to insert new section 9A of the Family Courts Act to make it clear that a lawyer acting for a party in any proceedings in the Family Court must, so far as possible, promote conciliation between parties.

Definition of settlement conference

We recommend amending clause 9 of the bill by inserting new sections 46J and 46K into the Care of Children Act to provide for settlement conferences to be convened by a Judge at any time before a proceeding is set down for a hearing. The purpose of settlement conferences is to ascertain whether the issues disputed by the parties can be settled and, if so, settling them by consent orders.

Contribution to costs of lawyers appointed to assist the court

Most of us consider it should be a default requirement that parties contribute to the cost of a lawyer to assist the court under the Care of Children Act, the Family Proceedings Act, and the Child Support Act, unless this would cause serious hardship. Most of us therefore recommend amending each of these Acts to include provisions that mirror those in the Legal Assistance Amendment Bill that require parties to contribute to the costs of lawyers appointed to represent children. The proportion of costs to be paid by parties would be prescribed by regulation; we were advised it is likely to be set at one third of the total cost.

Lawyer for the child

Most of us recommend amending the bill as introduced to amend new section 9B(1)(d) of the Family Courts Act (via new clause 81B) to make it clear that a lawyer for the child would be required to advise a child or young person on the merits of an appeal only to the extent that it was appropriate given the level of understanding of that child or young person.

We also recommend amending new section 9B(2) to make it clear that a lawyer should have regard to a child's age and maturity in ascertaining his or her views on matters in relation to the proceedings.

Counselling

The bill would repeal existing provisions for Family Court counselling under the Family Proceedings Act and Care of Children Act, and replace them with a new scheme involving mandatory parenting information programmes, FDR, and Judge-directed counselling. Most of us believe that counselling may help parties to prepare for FDR, but rather than providing for this counselling in the bill, we recommend it be considered as an operational matter.

We recommend amending proposed section 46E(4) of the Care of Children Act (contained in clause 9 of the bill as introduced) to clarify that a Judge may direct parties to attend counselling when making a final order. We consider that taxpayer-funded counselling should still be available for cases under the Care of Children Act, before or after final orders are made, if a Judge considers counselling to be the best way to help parties with their parenting relationship and the implementation of any decision of the court.

We also recommend amending clause 29 of the bill to enable regulations to be made prescribing the criteria to be applied when approving counselling organisations and the qualifications and competency requirements for appointment as a counsellor.

Parenting information programmes

The bill as introduced would require applicants for a parenting order to have undertaken a parenting information programme within the preceding two years of filing their application. However, this would not apply if they had been unable to participate effectively in a programme, or the application was made without notice. The applicant must state in their parenting order application whether they have attended a parenting information programme, or give a reason why they have not done so.

We recommend amending clause 9 of the bill to insert new section 46I into the Care of Children Act, allowing a Judge to direct parties to attend a parenting information programme, unless they have done so within the preceding two years. We consider that it could be useful for a Judge to be able to direct a person to attend a parenting information programme if they would not otherwise be required to attend or if they last attended a parenting information programme more than two years ago.

We also recommend amending the bill to make provision in section 8 of the Care of Children Act for parenting information programmes to be specified in regulations made under the Act.

Interim orders

We recommend amending clause 12 of the bill to move proposed new sections 49(2) and 49(3) of the Care of Children Act into new section 49A, and to insert a new section 49(2) requiring that before making an interim order a Judge must be satisfied that it would serve the welfare and best interests of the child better than a final order would. It is generally agreed that children need finality and certainty about arrangements for their care, and this change would ensure that their needs remained paramount in decisions on the making of interim orders.

Short reports

Short reports are crucial for alerting the court to potential risks to a child's safety, particularly when there are allegations of violence and abuse. They are generally provided within a day. We recommend the insertion of new clause 21A to insert new section 131A in the Care of Children Act to allow a Registrar to request brief written advice from a social worker on the nature and extent of any involvement Child, Youth and Family has had with the parties.

We recommend replacing section 133(5)(b) of the Care of Children Act (inserted by clause 22 of the bill) to allow the court to obtain a short-form psychological report on any of the matters specified in the definition of psychological report in section 133(1) of the Act. Short-form reports would be timely and less expensive than standard reports. We also recommend amending clause 22 of the bill to insert new section 133(11A), to make it clear that a party requesting a second opinion must pay for it.

Cases involving allegations of violence

The bill as introduced seeks to repeal sections 58 to 62 of the Care of Children Act 2004 and rely instead on sections 4 and 5 to protect the welfare and best interests of the child in all proceedings under the Act as well as in any other proceedings involving the guardianship, day-to-day care of, or contact with a child. The provisions in sections 58 to 62 require the court to establish whether the violence is proven, and if it is, to determine whether the child will be safe in the care of, or having contact with, the violent person. The existing provisions are concerned only with physical and sexual violence. Psychological violence is excluded unless the applicant has a protection order under the Domestic Violence Act 1995 on that ground; and the provisions do not distinguish levels or contexts of violence. The process is also considered to result in significant delay.

Clause 4 of the bill states that the welfare and best interests of the child must be paramount, and sets out the principles that must be taken into account by the court in determining a child's best interests. Proposed section 5(a) states that a child's safety must be protected and a child must be protected from all forms of violence, as defined in the Domestic Violence Act, from any person. This would allow a broader inquiry into any situation that might pose a risk to a child's safety than the current provisions. We consider that sections 4 and 5 provide strong protection for children.

However, we have taken into account concern that removal of the current provisions risks reducing the protections for children; so we recommend an amendment to clause 4 of the bill, to insert section 5A in the Act. This new section would mean that when the court is considering the safety of a child in relation to an application for a guardianship or parenting order, and a final protection order made under section 14 of the Domestic Violence Act is or has been in force against any of the parties to the application, then it must have regard to certain matters listed in section 5A(2).

Clause 4 of the bill as introduced proposes that section 4(2)(b) of the Care of Children Act specify that the conduct of persons wishing to have a role in the upbringing of the child may be taken into account in considering the child's welfare and best interests if that conduct was causing unnecessary delays in decision-making or was obstructive to any other person seeking to have a role in the upbringing of the child. We recommend amending proposed section 4(2)(b) of the Act to allow the court to take into account the conduct of a person seeking to be involved in the upbringing of the child to the extent this conduct is relevant to the child's welfare and best interests.

Domestic violence

The bill proposes changes to the Domestic Violence Act 1995 to ensure that existing provisions for the safety of children and other vulnerable people affected by domestic violence can be implemented safely and practically.

We recommend deleting clauses 38 to 50 of the bill as introduced and introducing a new clause 52A to insert new Part 2A into the Domestic Violence Act to set out the provisions relating to the delivery of safety programmes for protected persons and non-violence programmes for respondents and associated respondents. It is intended that practice guidelines and other operational matters would be developed with providers to support their practice, and these guidelines would be made available to the public.

We recommend that the interpretation in new section 51A now refer to “safety programme” rather than the “domestic violence support programme” in the bill as introduced. The proposed change in the term reflects the intended emphasis on the improvement of safety of protected persons in programme content. New section 51A would also change “programme provider” to “service provider”, recognising that providers undertake an assessment as well as delivering a programme. We also recommend that the definition of assessment in new section 51A include a service provider’s determination of the extent to which the respondent poses a safety risk for any person.

We recommend including new sub-section 51C(3) in new Part 2A of the Domestic Violence Act to allow persons who are under a protection order to request provision of a safety programme at any time. New section 51C(5) would allow a Registrar to determine the number of safety programme sessions following discussion with the service provider. We consider this flexibility would address the individual safety needs of each protected person and improve attendance at such programmes.

We recommend including new section 51L in the Domestic Violence Act, providing for the service provider and the respondent to settle the terms of attendance at a non-violence programme. We recommend, however, that new section 51M be included, to require the service provider to notify the Registrar if things are not going to plan, and the Registrar to bring the matter to the attention of a Judge if necessary. We consider this would provide increased opportunity for review where the respondent might have difficulty meeting the terms of the programme.

We recommend including new section 51I, which would require the service provider to notify the Registrar without delay if safety concerns are identified after undertaking an assessment of the respondent, or during the provision of a non-violence programme to a respondent. New subsection 51I(3) would then require the Registrar, on receiving a safety concern notification under 51I(2), to forward a copy of the notification to a Judge and advise the protected person of the service provider's concerns. This would ensure that a protected person was notified promptly if there were any perceived risk to their safety. New section 51I(4) would allow a Judge, on receiving a copy of a notification, to make any orders or directions appropriate to the circumstances.

We also recommend the inclusion of new section 51R requiring the service provider, on a respondent's completion of a non-violence programme, to promptly provide the Registrar with a report stating whether the respondent has achieved the non-violence programme objectives and advising of any concerns the service provider has about the safety of a protected person. Section 51R would also require the Registrar to forward the report to a Judge and to notify the protected person of any safety concerns raised in that report. New section 51R(3) would also enable a Judge to make any orders or directions he or she thinks fit following receipt of the report.

Approval of service providers

Within proposed new Part 2A, we recommend including sub-section 51B(1) to provide for the Secretary for Justice to grant, suspend, or cancel an approval of a person or organisation as a service provider. We also recommend amending clause 54 of the bill as introduced to replace section 127(a) to (e) of the Domestic Violence Act with a regulation-making power providing that regulations may be made prescribing the approval process to be followed by a person or an organisation seeking an approval, and the criteria to be applied by the Secretary for Justice when deciding whether to grant, suspend, or cancel an approval. This regime would replace the current Approvals Panel, which is expensive to administer and prevents the Ministry of Justice collaborating with other government funders of service providers. It would also streamline the process for providers.

Regulations Review Committee consideration

On 14 March 2013 the Regulations Review Committee considered the Family Court Proceedings Reform Bill, as provided for by Standing Order 314(3). The committee advised us that the bill as introduced contained a number of empowering provisions that would allow regulations made under them to include matters of substantial policy that would more appropriately be included in primary legislation.

The committee raised concern about family dispute resolution, and particularly the fact that the bill does not specify the principles, criteria, purpose, operational details, selection of providers, and the duration and scope of the process. It also highlighted a lack of detail on the appointment and payment of lawyers for children and lawyers to assist the court, and specialist report writers.

We have considered the matters drawn to our attention by the Regulations Review Committee and discuss our recommended amendments in the commentary above.

Petition of Noel Christopher Roderick Perry and 4,470 others

On 14 March 2013, Noel Christopher Roderick Perry and 4,470 others requested that the House “take action against imposing certain reforms in the New Zealand Family Court”. They asked that Parliament

Not implement changes to the Family Court system that will place restrictions on the right for people to have a lawyer represent them in proceedings involving the care of children or any proceedings in the Family Court.

Not implement changes to the Family Court system that will restrict the ability of a Judge to appoint a lawyer for the child in proceedings, even proceedings that are not regarded as serious cases.

Not reduce the availability of legal aid in proceedings in the Family Court including those cases involving the care of children.

Not to impose a fee for parties to enter the Family Dispute Resolution process to ensure that the process is not inaccessible and will not prevent matters resolving in a timely and child focussed way.

We have considered the petition alongside the Family Court Proceedings Reform Bill, as it concerns the reforms that the bill proposes to the family justice system. We have reported the petition to the House separately.

Labour Party minority view

The establishment more than 30 years ago of a specialist Family Court, with its jurisdiction covering care of children, domestic violence and property matters, with a high degree of state assistance provided to the parties, signalled an important policy principle: the state has an interest in effective and just resolution of family disputes. It is natural that after 30 years of operation, with its jurisdiction extended and adjusted in that time, the court should be subject to review and reform. It is widely known that the court suffers from delays which in turn can prevent effective resolution of disputes and can shift the focus away from the needs of children and vulnerable persons when their needs should be paramount.

Reasons for delays in the court were not fully explored in the evidence and advice received by the committee, but anecdotally they appear to include a greater insistence on issues in dispute going before a Judge for decision, elevated expectations by one or more parties of what they can achieve, more complex family arrangements being subject to court orders (for example the involvement of grandparents) and an increasing workload being carried by a static number of professionals advising the court and parties. Delays in the court almost certainly are one factor behind a rapid increase in the cost to the state of family dispute resolution.

The review and reform process which preceded this bill included an admirable level of consultation with interested stakeholders. This entailed a day-long workshop hosted by the then Minister in 2011, the release of a consultation paper in September 2011 which elicited over 200 submissions, and the establishment of an external reference group. The external reference group comprised court professionals, lawyers, a Judge and academics.

In the end, the reform to the court has focussed on care of children disputes, which comprise 39 per cent of the court's work. But the main reforms in the bill are not reflective of the results of the consultative process.

The principal reforms in the bill are:

- Limiting access to court-funded counselling at the time of separation. Limited counselling is only available after proceedings have been commenced (clause 9).

- Limiting the role of lawyers in the processes of the court and, therefore, limiting access to legal aid where that is presently available to a party. Legal aid will be available to a party entitled to it to a limited degree prior to (but not during) any mandated dispute resolution process and if the dispute or any part of it goes before a Judge (clause 5).
- Establishment of a mandatory (except where domestic violence is alleged) private, non-judicial process, called family dispute resolution (FDR), for resolving disputes which will require parties to participate in a mediation or facilitation process without representation. The parties are to meet the cost of this process which official advice suggests will be around $900, although no advice has been provided about how much mediation/facilitation time this might purchase and whether it is expected to be sufficient for most disputes (clause 9). The court will have the power to order parties to undertake further FDR if the court considers it may benefit the parties, and this may entail more expense for the parties.
- Limiting the role of counsel for the child by raising the threshold for appointment by the court. In order to make an appointment, the bill requires the court to have “concerns for the safety or well-being of the child and consider an appointment necessary” (clause 5). Children will not be separately represented in the FDR process where that takes place. The official advice is that parents are expected to represent the best interests of the child in that process.
- Part of the costs of a lawyer appointed to represent a child or to assist the court (usually where one or neither party to the proceeding is represented) may be passed onto one or both parties to the proceeding (clause 21).
- Principles relating to the child’s welfare and best interests to include that a child’s care, development and upbringing should entail ongoing consultation and co-operation between parents and/or guardians and a child should continue to have a relationship with both parents (clause 4).

We are opposed to the bill.

We reject the ideological underpinning of the reform, which appears to be that as family disputes are private matters, there is no role for the state in assisting people to resolve those disputes. We believe that there is a very real public interest in the peaceful resolution of disputes, whether or not they are of a personal nature.

This bill is a departure from what is well settled practice. The New Zealand legal system has always reflected the need to provide specialised support to assist people deal with the breakdown in a range of relationships, including employment relationships; and family relationships are no different.

The Family Proceedings Act 1980 requires the court to promote reconciliation (that is, restoring parties' intimate relationship) or, if that is not possible, conciliation (that is, reaching an amicable agreement). The regulatory impact statement states that the court fulfils this obligation by providing court-funded counselling. It then goes on to say that counselling costs the State approximately $9.7 million per year.

Instead of identifying the public benefit in promoting reconciliation and conciliation, the RIS states that this may not be the best use of the court's limited resources. "The primary expertise of Judges is adjudicating disputes. A reconciliation and conciliation function can contribute to delay and may be better dealt with in the community." This makes it clear that the primary interest is the cost, rather than the outcome. The private nature of the dispute is used as a convenient smokescreen for shifting the cost of a tried and true method for achieving what is an enormous public benefit, as well as risking losing those successful reconciliations or conciliated results.

When children are involved then the public interest is even clearer. Children, unfortunately, cannot always rely on their parents, especially in the throes of a relationship breakdown, to keep their interests as a paramount consideration, which is the foundation of the Care of Children Act 2004.

We do not accept that a process in which separating parents are required to resolve their disputes without representation and with only a mediator/facilitator to assist can realistically or practically be relied on to deliver robust and enduring settlements. Moreover, we do not think that parents going through the stress and distress of separation are, in most cases, able to objectively consider the best interests of their children. We think that independent assistance to the child is necessary for the benefit of the child and for the parents.

The overwhelming evidence received by the committee was that counsel for the child played an invaluable role, often mediating between the parents' positions and interests. One submitter, a father, averred that counsel for the child was the only objective advice in the process and was crucial to achieving an acceptable outcome in his family's case.

The external reference group involved in the consultation processes before the bill was introduced made its own submission to the committee largely out of concern that the principal reforms in the bill did not reflect their advice and work on the reforms. They stated in their submission:

Most Family Court cases involve high stress to parties and for a wide variety of reasons parties struggle to advocate for themselves in the legal process. The risk to vulnerable adults and children from a limited right to legal representation will be significant because in the absence of legal representation:

- (a) It will be more difficult to identify the "hidden" risks in what may appear to otherwise be a straightforward case;
- (b) Cases will be more, rather than less, adversarial;
- (c) It will be more difficult to focus on the relevant factual and legal issues in cases and where there is risk for adults and children;
- (d) The power imbalance between parties which permeate cases under this Act is more entrenched if parties do not have legal representation. (Antony Mahon and others, "Response of Members of Expert Reference Group to Cabinet Policy Announcements for Reform of the Family Court", paragraph 3.7)

Even though the Minister of Justice announced during the committee's consideration of this bill that more provision for access to legal advice would be made than had earlier been proposed, we do not think the bill in its present form goes far enough to ensure parties will be properly advised and supported.

Since the Minister's announcement there has been a further change in the landscape, with the Court of Appeal decision on 24 May 2013 in Criminal Bar Association v. Attorney General [2013] NZCA 176 on the operation of the legal aid system. Even though that decision concerned legal aid for criminal cases, it will have implications for legal aid for family cases too, and so the claimed fiscal benefits of the Family Court reforms are now uncertain.

We do not think that the denial of independent representation of the child in the FDR process or the higher threshold for appointment of counsel for the child satisfies New Zealand's obligations in the United National Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC), specifically Article 12, which says:

1. States Parties shall assure to the child who is capable of forming his or her own views the right to express those views freely in all matters affecting the child, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child.
2. For this purpose, the child shall in particular be provided the opportunity to be heard in any judicial and administrative proceedings affecting the child, either directly, or through a representative or an appropriate body, in a manner consistent with the procedural rules of national law.

We do not see how the FDR process, which excludes the voice of affected children, can be seen as enabling a child to express their views and ensure they are given due weight. We do not think that excluding the child's voice in a process that is an informal substitute for a purely judicial proceeding is consistent with the words and spirit of paragraph 2 of Article 12 of UNCRC.

It is clear that the overriding motivation behind this bill is fiscal. It is the wish to reduce the costs to the state of family disputation. In our view, the measures contained in this bill go far beyond a sensible adjustment to reduce delay in the present system and will more likely result in a transfer of the cost of family conflict and poorly resolved family disputes to other parts of government.

Green Party minority view

It has been proposed that this bill is necessary to effect changes to the Family Court, as it has not worked as well for some children and their families as it should have for many years.

While after some thirty years of operation it is evident that improvements could well be made to the court, we do not see in this bill a positive or workable set of provisions that will serve the interests of those who seek remedy through the court.

The intention to try and reduce the number of cases going to court, to divert separating couples into some form of dispute resolution, is not without merit. What has been largely overlooked however is that a significant majority of couples do resolve their issues informally, without recourse to the court, and that those who do become engaged in legal proceedings are already less amenable to a negotiated outcome.

The select committee heard from a large number of submitters, including lawyers, counsellors, and other professionals with experience in Family Court matters, and many of them expressed serious concern about the proposed changes.

These concerns included the limits being placed on access to court-funded counselling; the reduced role for legal representation for parties to disputes; the expectation that parties will be obliged to pay quite substantial amounts of money at a time when many are already financially stressed; and concerns that the wellbeing of children and vulnerable parents would not be adequately protected.

Some useful amendments have been made to the bill in the course of the select committee process, but we still have no confidence that the reforms will not leave some people in a much worse position than might otherwise be achieved.

There is no evidence that the suite of services required to implement the bill will be available to all those who might need those services—barriers will include location, lack of access to information about what (if any) services are available, the complexity of processes and documents, and affordability.

We are not convinced that victims of domestic violence will be identified at an early stage in every case, and so victims may well find themselves obliged to enter a resolution process with their abusers.

The Green Party does not support this bill, and recommends that it proceed no further.
